Bluepoint Solutions Introduces Robust E-Statement Replacement

Eases Burden on Credit Union IT Staff

Vista, Calif. - Bluepoint Solutions, a premier provider of document management solutions for credit unions, today announced the introduction of Internet Member Access (IMA), a replacement for stand-alone e-statement products. IMA provides members with Internet-based access to any document stored in the Bluepoint system, including but not limited to statements.

"Our goal has always been to provide credit union employees with instant access to any document," says Hal Tilbury, Bluepoint CEO and founder. "Now we've extended that same functionality to the member."

IMA offers the credit union complete control over which documents are available for member viewing. These can include statements, canceled checks, deposited checks, receipts, loan documents, etc. This provides unprecedented convenience to the member, while automating a member-service function that would normally require handling by a credit union employee.

"The proliferation of technology-related products and services has put a tremendous burden on credit union IT," adds Tilbury. "By deploying IMA as an add-on to our system, our customers can eliminate the need for a stand-alone e-statement product."

According to Tilbury, Bluepoint's combination of point-of-origination capture, automated indexing, and a member-centric database means that losing a document in the system is virtually impossible. Bluepoint credit unions will never receive a "Where's my document?" phone call from a confused member.
